

Alex Leckerling

Manager

Alex Leckerling is a seasoned operations and public affairs leader with nearly two decades of experience aligning strategy, people, and processes to drive organizational impact. Her career spans corporate communications, management consulting, philanthropy, and experiential marketing. Alex has built high-performing teams and led complex initiatives that deliver results for mission-driven organizations and high-profile leaders.

A graduate of Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas, Alex began her career in politics, managing high-profile events and initiatives for candidates, PACs, and the First Lady of the United States. She later served as Business Manager to the late David H. Koch at Koch Industries in New York, providing strategic counsel, operational management, and philanthropic oversight.

Most recently, Alex led office administration and operations for Analysis Group's Denver office, where she directed facilities and real estate operations, managed budgeting and cost controls, and ensured operational efficiency across all administrative functions. In this role, she played a key part in aligning local operations with firm-wide objectives to drive consistent execution, compliance, and integration.

Outside of work, Alex is an active member of the Columbia community, volunteering as an event lead and foster with Final Victory Animal Rescue. She and her fiancé enjoy spending time outdoors with their retrievers.
